

CPYRGHT

FOIAb3b

DONOVAN SEEKING 'ANTI-JAVITS' VOTE

In a Tour Upstate, He Says
Rival 'Pleases No One'

By DAVID ANDERSON

Special to The New York Times

ONEONTA, N. Y., Oct. 22—

James B. Donovan, the Democratic-Liberal candidate for the Senate, campaigned through the dairy country of the Susquehanna Valley today in soft autumn sunshine.

Mr. Donovan was told in his passage across Broome, Delaware and Otsego Counties of voters who asserted openly their preference for him because, they said, a vote for him would be one against his opponent, Senator Jacob K. Javits.

The Democratic candidate lost little time in making hay of these reports. He told a luncheon of the party faithful at Binghamton, for example, that "many Republicans upstate are attracted to me because of my opponent, a man who is a Republican in name only, one who voted for 74 per cent of the Administration's bills and opposed 51 per cent of the Republican measures in the recent session of Congress."

Mr. Donovan had a limited exposure to the voting public in the valley. This came in the Scintilla Division of the Bendix Corporation at Sidney, where he toured a large plant enjoying a boom in defense contracts—there are 5,600 workers employed on three shifts.

"This is the first time I've ever run for political office," Mr. Donovan told workers on the production line when he singled them out now and then. He was quite diffident about it. "It's pretty interesting meeting you people, and educating for me, too." Almost always the reply was given with a sympathetic smile: "Pleased to meet you, Mr. Donovan."

When he did speak at some length, Mr. Donovan said, "Javits is trying to satisfy all men and has wound up pleasing no one but himself."

Or, "New York State is paying the largest share of taxes to Washington, yet we are getting back a miserably low share in defense contracts and this is responsible for rising unemployment in many industries. This just doesn't seem to make sense to me," he said.